THE Madras Monthly JOURNAL, OR INDIA RECORDER: FOR JANUARY, 1807

When Emulation sways the human breast,
Each energy of GENIUS is called forth ;
Daring, as when, from his high-mantel'd nest
The bird of Jove wings thro' the frozen north.
'Tis Competition, and the thirst of Fame,
Which gild the Warrior's and the Statesman's name.
So when a Courser's train'd the Circus round,
With measur'd pace, he treads the well-mark'd ground ;
Anon, behold, with some fleet steed he vies,
Fir'd with the glow for excellence, he flies,
Like a bright meteor thro' the vaulted skies !

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

It will be obvious to the studious class of our Correspondents and Subscribers, that the plan of "the Dramatic Sketches," now first introduced in this month's Journal, calls for a very extensive scope of Scenic readings. We shall therefore consider ourselves highly favored by the transmission of such Dramitica notitia, critica et memoranda, as may be comprehended within the design of those Histrionic pursuits.

EFFECTS OF NOVEL-READING.

(Captain Clerimont and Pounce.)

Pounce. Well, then, ſince we may be free, you muſt underſtand, the young lady, by being kept from the world, has made a world of her own.—She has ſpent all her ſolitude in reading romances; her head is full of ſhepherds, knights, flowery meads, groves and ſtreams; ſo that if you talk like a man of this world to her, you do nothing.

Captain. Oh, let me alone—I have been a great traveller in fairy land myſelf; I know Oroondates and Cassandra;—as to Astrea and Clelia, they are of my intimate acquaintance. Hear, by way of ſample:

Go, my heart's envoys, tender sighs make haste,
And with your breath swell the soft Zephyr's blast:
Then near that fair one, if you chance to fly,
Tell her, in whispers, 'tit for her I die!!!

Pounce. That would do, that would do—her very language.

THE TENDER HUSBAND. ACT. I, SC. II.

The above is a well-turned ſatire upon the vile traſh, with which circulating libraries are uſually furniſhed. It is true, it may be objected, that romances (properly ſo called, in contradiſtinction to novels) are not the prevailing rage of the day. Granted; and whilſt we do, we muſt be allowed to apprehend, that the modern adoption is infinitely more pernicious to the morals of both ſexes. Romance-reading, at the worſt, might, a century or two ago, have rendered our young people ſomewhat wild and extravagant; novel-reading, on the other hand in these our days, has too general a tendency, (one production out of one hundred excepted) to inculcate vanity, and diſſeminate vice.

AN IRISH ESTATE.

(Colonel Careless hiring Teague.)

Care. Come, Teague; however, I have a ſuit of clothes for thee; thou ſhalt lay by thy blanket for ſome time. It may be, thee and I may be reduced together to thy country faſhion.

Teague. Upon my ſoul, joy, I will carry thee to my little eſtate in Ireland.

Care. Haſt thou got an eſtate?

Teague. By my ſoul and I have; but the land is of ſuch a nature, that if you had it for nothing, you would ſcarce make your money of it.

THE COMMITTEE. ACT. I. SC. I.

An humorous alluſion to that old and well known ſtanding jeſt, viz. "That every Iriſhman has five hundred pounds a year and a deer-park."

THE KIRK OF SCOTLAND.

(Frederick a Spaniſh merchant, and Colonel Briton a Scotch Officer.)

Fred. —— Colonel, you were ever a man of gallantry.

Col. Ah, Frederick! the kirk half ſtarves us Scotchmen. We are kept ſo ſharp at home, that we feed like cannibals abroad.——

So much for the Colonel; let us now hear what honeſt Gibby ſays.

(Gibby in search of Donna Isabella.)

Gibby. Ay, this is bony wark indeed! to run three hundred meels to this wratched toun, and beefore I çan weel fill my weam, to bee ſent a ganging after ſome greet, tall, tralaping ſhe deevil—— what gate ſhall I gang to ſpeer for this wutch now? Ah for a ruling elder—or the kirk's treaſurer—or his mon—I'd gar my maſter mak twa o'this—But I am ſure, there's na ſick honeſt people here, or there wud na bee ſa mickle ſculdudrie.

THE WONDER, A WOMAN KEEPS A SECRET.
ACTS I and III.

Honeſt Gibby's kirk like ſentiments are ſo much in point, as to preclude any neceſſity for comment.

SIMPLICITY OF DRESS.

(Hardcaſtle and Miſs Hardcaſtle.)

Hard. Bleſſings on my pretty innocence! Dreſt out as uſual, my Kate.

Miſs Hard. You know our agreement, Sir. You allow me the morning to receive and pay viſits, and to dreſs in my own manner; and in the evening, I put on my houſewife's dreſs to pleaſe you.

Hard. Well, remember I insist on the terms of our agreement; for indeed, my Kate, I would not have thee always thus attired. Goodness! What a quantity of superfluous silk hast thou got about thee, girl! I could never teach the fools of this age, that the indigent world could be cloathed out of the trimmings of the vain!

SHE STOOPS TO CONQUER; OR, THE MISTAKES OF A NIGHT. ACT. I. S. III.

Altho' the amiable Author, from whose scenes the foregoing sketch is transcribed, wrote but two Comedies, and not one Tragedy; yet, in the course of his other multifarious Essays, whenever he touched upon the chords of the finer feelings, they never failed to vibrate upon the heart of sensibility.

It is well known, that the ill-fated GOLDSMITH traversed a great part of the Continent of Europe, moneyless, friendless, and on foot! With this melancholy claim, too frequently the lot of the unprotected student,) who could be more justifiable in inveighing against the lavish waste of prodigal wantonness? or, who more competent to depict the miseries of suffering humanity, than he who hath been thus exercised in the harsh school of Adversity?

Haud inexpertus loquor!

[SKETCHES from TRAGEDY in the SECOND NUMBER.]

To the EDITOR of the MADRAS MONTHLY JOURNAL.

SIR,

The genius of Milton has been, by many, spoken of as not of an original stamp; and, that his manner is, in a great measure borrowed from writers of an ancient date, as well as many of his ideas; and furthermore, that when he wrote his Paradise Lost, that he had Homer and Virgil in his study. It has been also alleged, that he borrowed largely from the German Jesuit Marenius, and various other modern authors. The subject and design of his incomparable poem is, certainly, without a precedent; and to select a fine passage, it may be read throughout, and every line will be found rich in sublimity and effect; at the same time one must feel astonished upon reflecting, what a copious and abundant imagination the author must have possessed to have supported him thro' so arduous an undertaking. In many parts how majestically does he not paint the power and omnipotence of the Almighty! and again how ſorcibly is depicted the miſerable revenge of Satan, after he had revolted from his allegiance to the Deity! With what beauty of deſcription does he not open his third Book, in which he has given the greateſt proof of the ſublimity of his genius! The ſubject is certainly the moſt noble and magnificient that can poſſibly be imagined, or could be conceived by man. Indeed were one to mark out beauties; they might be traced from any one part, and all would be found fully deſcriptive and equally fine. I muſt again repeat, that I conceive his ſubject to be wholly original, as alſo his ſtile and embelliſhments; and am ſatisfied that his genius was of ſuch a natuje as not to allow him whatever to copy; but I ſhould be glad of a further elucidation upon this ſubject, from ſome of your ingenious Correſpondents, whoſe judgments may be more competent to guide them thro' the thorny paths of Criticiſm than that of,

SIR,

Your Conſtant Reader,

Luz, 4th January 1807. CLERICUS.

THE PLEASURE ARISING FROM AN INSPECTION OF RUINS OR ANCIENT STRUCTURES.

It is little to be wondered at, that erudite men are fond of the ſtudy of antiquity, which offers ſuch liberal rewards to the diligent antiquarian. Curioſity, the ſtrongeſt principle of rational beings, here meets with conſtant matter for gratification; it often feeds on ſomething unexplored before, and the feaſt receives a greater zeſt from its novelty. But there is no portion of this ſtudy more deſerving of attention, than that which compriſes the hiſtory of ancient buildings, ſuch as caſtles, turrets and abbeys. The pleaſure ariſing from ſuch objects is beautifully deſcribed in the following lines:

" I do love to ſee ancient ruins,
Where every ſtep one treads,
One walks o'er ſome rever'd name;
And here in this long open court, which lies
Expoſed to th' injuries of ſtormy weather,
How many lie interr'd!
Who loved devotion; and who free beſtow'd,
Thinking it ſhould have canoniz'd their bones,
Till doomeſday;—but all things have an end;
Cities and Churches, like gradual diſeaſe
And all muſt ſink like them to nought!

No one of the leaſt ſentiment or imagination can look upon an ancient edifice in ruins, without feeling ſublime emotions; a thouſand ideas croud upon his mind, and fill him with awful veneration. As this pleaſure is of a mixed kind, it ariſes probably from the beautifully-picturesque ſituation of the place. The ſcenery, perhaps, a fine rich valley with a large hanging wood in the back ground; a river running near, with a fine rich proſpect, to the eye of the ſpectator, in every direction, gratify the love of natural beauties; whilſt the ſtill retirement of the ſpot, added to the fertility and verdure ſpread about it, give it an air of ſolemn enchantment. We cannot help admiring the judicious taſte of the monks, in ſelecting ſcenes for their monaſteries ſo well adapted to pleaſe and tranquillize the human mind, and to prepare it for receiving ſacred impreſſions, with calm and unruffled temper. But the appearance of the ruins, their ſhattered fragments, the broken and decayed aſpect of every part, the various p ſſages, rooms, cellars and winding ſtair-caſes, with a profuſion of luxuriant ivy, creeping along every ſtone of the buildings, give it an air of rude ſublimity. A thouſand fancies enter the mind of the penſive beholder. He ſometimes returns in thought to the period when thoſe abbeys ſhone in proſperity; he ſees the Abbot and the Monks carouſing at table, feeding upon delicate diſhes, and quaffing the moſt luxuriant wines; or he reviews them, as they paſs, in proceſſion, to morning and evening prayers, dreſſed in the manner of their order; he retires with them into their private apartments, and obſerves ſome employed in holy exerciſe, and others devoted to indolence and luxury. Again, the beholder is abſorbed in thoughts more elevating. He is reminded, by the venerable ruin, of the lapſe of time; of the vaſt revolution in men and things which have taken place ſince it was firſt erected; how many generations of mankind have flouriſhed and died within its walls, and how the ſame fate is awaiting others, and with them, himſelf! Such reflections impreſs the mind with awful ſeriouſneſs, combined with intellectual pleaſure.

Beſides, it is impoſſible to contemplate a large pile of ruins without regretting it's dilapidated beauties, and ſilently lamenting the ravages of time. Whilſt we admire the remains of labour, architecture and ſtrength diſplayed in thoſe ſtructures, we are reminded of the vanity of human grandeur, the abaſed glory of our anceſtors, and the neceſſity of ſeeking out for A TABERNACLE NOT BUILT WITH HANDS.

An ENGRAVING, entitled OSSIAN, by M. GODEFROY.

An engraving has recently appeared at Paris which greatly adds to the justly acquired reputation of M. Godefroy. It is intitled "Ossian." What grand ideas, what noble, what melancholy images that name recals! Those ideas and those images are all represented in the beautiful picture by Gerard, of which this engraving is a copy. It is impossible to introduce more unity into a piece, which, without being much varied, is, however, very complex; more gracefulness into a mournful subject, or more truth into an imaginary scene. The son of Fingal, aged and blind, attunes, on the banks of the Lutha, the last notes of his harp and of his voice. His attitude is deeply impassioned. The spectator imagines that he sees the movement of his venerable head, and of his snowy locks. With his extinguished orbs he no longer seeks a ray of light; they are cast down and closed; his mind is wholly concentrated in his poetic enthusiasm, and in the recollection of heroic atchievements; he plunges, as it were, into torrents of harmony and glory. He has lost every thing; he has survived all those objects which attached him to life. It is time that he should join the company of his ancestors: he departs, he bids adieu to the mountains of his native land, but he leaves behind him a memory durable as the oak of the forests of Morven.

All that passes in the imagination of the aged bard, is realized on the canvas by the youthful painter. The shades of his forefathers are assembled on their clouds. On one side, the majestic Fingal, supporting his head with his hand, listening to the song of his son. With his left arm he closely presses the beauteous Comala, his youthful mistress, she, who accompanied him in battle, in the disguise of a young warrior, and who died of joy on seeing him return triumphant, at the moment she was deploring his death. The aged Trenmor, the stock of the race of Fingal, is on his right, and behind them are the other heroes. On the other side is seated the youthful Oscar; his attitude is mournful; the tender Malvina embraces, consoles him with her caresses, and appears herself to derive consolation from the songs of the father of Oscar. Above them is a group of heroines; Evirallin, the wife of Ossian, whose sweet voice he has celebrated, the daughters of Morni and others, accompany with their harps the harp of the son of Fingal, scatter flowers, and bring crowns for their hero.

Thus every part of this beautiful piece tends to one common centre Offian is furrounded only with the objects of his affection and the creations of his genius. He himfelf, the torrent, a rural landfcape, the antique turrets of the caftle of his forefathers, the blueifh range of mountains, and, on their fummit, the fun's pale orb, are alone realities, and the admirable fidelity of the pencil, the magic diftribution of light and fhade, render them not only vifible but palpable. All the reft is ideal, all the figures of heroines are aërial and tranfparent It is impoffible to render more complete the illufion refulting from the fkilful combination of fancy and truth.

The engraving is executed with the utmoft fidelity.

RETORT UNCOURTEOUS.

A bas-blue lady, who was extremely ugly, became editor of the works of a man of genius, with whom, (during his life time) fhe had long been acquainted. Upon affuming this office, fhe defired a man of wit to write a preface to the book, and exculpate her from any improper connexion with the deceafed writer, as fhe had heard that fuch reports prevailed. "Madam," fays the wag, indignant at her vanity, "inftead of fuch a preface, affix your vifage before the work."

A DOCTRINE WELL-DEFENDED.

A preacher had held forth diffufely and ingenioufly upon the doctrine, "that the creator of the univerfe had made all things beautiful." A little crooked lawyer met him at the church door, and exclaimed, "well, Doctor, what do you think of my figure; does it correfpond with your tenets of this morning?" My friend, replied the preacher, with much gravity, you are really handfome, for—an hunch-backed man."

THE FORCE OF EXAMPLE.

The artift who would make a perfect circle, employs a compafs; and the man who wifhes to be well acquainted with his duties, muft ftudy the precepts and examples of the wife and good.

APPLICATION.

We cannot, without fome degree of ftudy, learn a fimple game of amufement. How then can we expect to acquire knowledge and wifdom, without applying our minds to it?

AN ACCOUNT OF PARAGUAY, OR LA PLATA.

It is bounded N. W. by Tucaman and Grand Chaco, extends South to the Straits of Magellan comprehending a great part of the country Eaſt of the Andes.

The Grand River La Plata is one of the largeſt on this Globe: it is 150 miles wide at its mouth—it has few iſlands till you arrive at Buenos Ayres, 180 miles above which it is full of Iſlands—the navigation of this River is difficult and dangerous, and it has numerous branches ſpreading in all directions.

From the ſituation of this country ſome part of it muſt be extremely hot, from the almoſt vertical influence of the rays of the Sun; while other parts muſt be pleaſant and delightful: the heat is, however, in ſome meaſure abated by the gentle breezes which generally begin about 9 or 10 o'clock in the morning, and continue the greateſt part of the day. Some parts of the country are very mountainous; but in many others you find extenſive and beautiful plains, where the ſoil is very rich, producing abundance of wheat, and grains of all kind; cotton, tobacco, and the valuable herb called Paraguay; together with a variety of fruits, ſuch as apples, pears, peaches, apricots, pomegranates, quinces, figs, grapes, oranges, lemons, limes, and melons of all ſorts; vines are cultivated here, and ſome delicious wines are made. There are alſo prodigiouſly rich paſtures, in which are bred ſuch herds of cattle, that it is a fact the hides are the only part made uſe of, while the fleſh is left to be devoured by the ravenous beaſts of the wilderneſs.

Buenos-Ayres, is one of the moſt conſiderable towns in South America, and the only place of traffick to the Southward of Brazil; it is the capital of La Plata, in the ſouth diviſion and province of La Plata—South Lat. 34° 35'—Weſt Long. 57° 54, its ſituation on the ſouth ſide of the River La Plata, on a gentle eminence, is healthy and pleaſant, and the air temperate.—Behind the city, from S. W. to S. E. is Pampas plain, 300 miles in extent, in conſtant verdure, interſperſed with country ſeats, producing few trees, but much graſs, on which ſubſiſt innumerable horſes and other cattle. Towards the N—the great River ſpreads like a ſpacious ſea, the oppoſite ſhore being beyond the reach of the eye: it is 7 miles in circumference, and regularly built in a ſquare of about 200 feet; its ſtreets are 30 or 40 feet wide; the houſes one ſtory high, chiefly of brick, with a court in the middle, and each is accommodated with a garden; the number of the inhabitants is estimated variously at 30,000—and some accounts say 100,000 including the slaves; one side of the town is defended by a fortress with a garrison—The town stands 180 miles from the sea: the mail comes in once a month from Lima. In ascending the river, it is necessary to anchor every night, and on the most moderate days, a pilot must go to sound the way for the ship, on account of the shallowness of the water, and the shifting of the channel: after having surmounted these difficulties, the ships are obliged at the distance of three leagues from the town, to put their goods on board some light vessel, and to go and refit, and wait for their cargoes at Incennado de Barragan, situated 7 or 8 leagues below, on the South West side. The Tribunal of Royal Audience was re-established in 1783—the buildings, although of brick, are handsome, commodious, and many really elegant. There are 16 churches, 11 of which are large and rich; 5 convents, 2 monasteries, 2 hospitals with rich funds, one for men and the other for women, 1 foundling hospital, 1 college, and 1 academy for teaching Geography, Navigation, and Drawing. Here we meet with the Merchants of Europe and Peru; but no regular fleet comes here, as to the other parts of Spanish America: 2 or 3 register ships, make the whole of their regular intercourse with Europe: the returns are chiefly gold, and silver; of Chili and Peru, sugar and hides.

Those who have carried on a contraband trade to this city, have found it more advantageous than any other whatever. The contraband traders carry dry goods, (chiefly those manufactured on the Coast of Coromandel) and take hides, tallow, Peruvian bark, &c. &c.—there are besides the most valuable returns, as Vigogma wool from Peru, copper from Coquimbo, gold from Chili, and silver from Potosi. From the towns of Corientes and Paraguay, the former 250—the latter 500 leagues from Buenos-Ayres—are brought hither the finest tobacco, sugars, cotton, thread, yellow wax, and cotton cloth; and from Paraguay, the herb, so called, and highly valued, being a kind of tea, drank all over South America, by the better sort: this one branch is computed to amount to a million of pieces of eight, annually, and is paid in goods, no money being allowed to pass here—The commerce between Peru and Buenos Ayres, is chiefly for cattle and mules, to an immense value.

Although money is plenty, and labour extravagantly high, most other things are surprizingly cheap, a fat bullock is sold for a dollar; a hog weighing from 3 to 400 pounds, sells for a dollar and a half—a good saddle horse will fetch from 25 to 30 dollars—Some farmers in Paraguay keep 50,000 mares for breeding: their sheep are almost innumerable; their meat and wool are excellent; the country is overrun with herds of cattle and horses, which are killed principally for their hides, tongues and tallow. This province has been for some years rich and flourishing; since the Galleons have left going to Terra Firma, this has become the general mart of commerce for all the provinces of Peru; to which place, and also to Chili, the merchandize is transported in carts drawn by oxen, which generally go in caravans, which are armed, on account of the savages and warlike Indians, who still keep possession of great part of the extensive plains which lie between this and the Cordeleras mountains, and which are called the Pampas. During this war, they have not sufficient market for their wool; and lately 60,000 sheep have been sold for 70 dollars; but with the particular condition, that the purchaser should count them. Various kinds of furs are brought from Patagonia by the Indians, among which are Tigers and Leopards.

The river La Plata, annually overflows its banks, rendering its shores amazingly fertile; very rarely does the vegitable kingdom suffer for want of Rain, yet great numbers live in extreme poverty; every person, who makes, any pretensions to being free, having a mortal avertion to labour; if they can only procure a Puncho they are easy. The Puncho is a square piece of cloth, made by the Indians of Chili, about three yards square, with wide stripes, and a yellow fringe. A hole is made through the middle, bound with gold lace; through this they put their heads and the cloth hangs loose round their bodies. A ragged pair of breeches, but no coat, waistcoat, shirt, stockings, or shoes are worn with the Puncho—The rich people live in affluence, are affable, hospitable to strangers, and charitable to the poor; their amusements are riding, bull baiting and dancing. Seines are dragged in the river by horses or oxen; the water being shallow they may proceed half a mile from the shore: the country swarms with quails, partridges and other birds, they ride among them, and with a long lash bring them down—Wild horses and cattle are caught with a long thong of raw hide, one end being fastened to the saddle, at the other is a two pound ball; this they throw and entangle the beast, and bring him to the ground; the indians use this in the battle, and the Spaniards often find it a deadly weapon.

This great and rich country—for want of an active commerce is like a great carcass without arteries or veins, activity or life; under the direction of a wise legislature, labour would be roused, commerce flow from every sea, useful science exalt, and the fine arts adorn this happly clime.—Such benefits will I trust, arise to the new possessors of this Paradise.

On True Beauty.

Enquiring with myself wherein true beauty consists, and how it may be attained, the best account I could find for it was true virtue. I know this will appear strange to some; but I am not here to enter into metaphysical disputes or criticisms on other people; I appeal to nature, and shall proceed to deliver my opinion.

When all the faculties of the soul harmoniously conspire in their several operations in due proportion to their nature, without jarring and interrupting one another, then the mind is serene, and the person is virtuous and happy. The outward form, like an instrument tuned in concord, presents to the eye an image of this internal harmony. The face is never a false glass, but through artifice and bad habits.

What it is in external forms that excites in us the idea of beauty, but the harmony and delicate proportions observed in the arrangement of certain particles of matter? But as the soul arranges and moves all matter, those harmonies and delicacies of proportion never could take place under the influence of an unharmonious mind.

How amiable are the characters of children! and there are few of them come so far of age as to have their features distinctly marked but who appear pretty; and yet gradually grow up, we often see their muscles convulsed by passions; their features turn coarser and stronger; and then their beauty flies.

There is a great deal of beauty owing to the happiness of birth: as, for example, where the father and mother have been well assorted and lived a temperate life, in peace and mutual love; in such a case, the children are fresh and vigorous, yet the flow of their blood and animal spirits is not irregular; they naturally are more difpofed to a life of tranquillity and virtue, which, as it does not ruffle the mind, the face, its image, is more ferene.

I would make allowances for the fmall-pox and other accidents of ficknefs, or the cares and diftreffes of life, that imprint themfelves upon the face. Some of thefe rather confirm than contradict our theory; and at any rate they are like whirlwinds, inundations, earthquakes, and other extraordinary calamities, againft which no provifion can be made in the ordinary courfe of human affairs. There are, however, many diftreffes which impair beauty, for which people have themfelves to blame, fuch as the hyfteric difeafe. This indeed chiefly arifes from fome unfortunate accident or fhock to the tender female conftitution: but frequently alfo from floth and idlenefs, and a romantic imagination, where there has been no ufeful bufinefs to keep the mind employed, and proper exercife for the health of the body. The laws of nature are inflexible; the tranfgreffion of them always proves its own punifhment.

Reading books of extravagant poetry raifes correfponding tumults in the mind, as they paint all the paffions immoderate. Tragedies, fuch as they frequently are, books of romantic love, and, which is fifty times worfe, books of romantic intrigues, all tend to difturb the breaft of the tender fair one. As their imaginations are more lively than ours, they are more apt to receive wrong impreffions, and have their tafte corrupted. Thus the unfortunate maid pines inwardly from a wounded imagination, and her corroded beauty falls a victim to her folly.

It is the hardeft tafk in the world to form the heart of goodnefs, an early and prudent application to the tender minds bids faireft for fuccefs; but that care muft be perpetual, and you muft keep from them every thing that would counteract your good defigns. Your own example fhould be extremel y exact and regular. Nothing more becomes the human kind than piety, and nothing is a better affiftant and a guardian to virtue. Your fervants fhould be chofen with the greateft care; you would fcruple to truft them with your purfe, and you daily truft them with a treafure infinitely more valuable, the forming of the characters and inclinations of your children. Join to thefe a conftant employment in fome ufeful bufinefs, and moderation in diet and in fleep.

I may obferve here, that fome parents hurt their children by unreaſonable and unbounded indulgence; others by too much harſhneſs and ſeverity. Whatever wrong caſt is given to the mind by erroneous education, or other accidents, the face receives the impreſſion of it, as wax does from the ſeal.

According to the different characters and complexions of people, the wiſe and good author of nature has conſtituted various kinds of beauty, which ſtrike various correſponding taſtes. As there is ſcarce a complexion of mind, but what, under proper reſtrictions and correctives, you will find agreeable; there ſeems, in like manner, ſcarcely a complexion of face which will not ſtrike and pleaſe ſome particular taſte: if the inward form of mind is ſound and good, and where thoſe features were preſerved freſh in that economy and arrangement in which they are originally placed, beauty is diffuſed over all the univerſe with unbounded munificence, and diverſified innumerable ways: and you will rarely obſerve any great defect of beauty which is not owing to perverſion of the economy of nature, through the pride, affectation, and other follies of mankind.

How pleaſing does the countenance appear when the mind is cheerful and ſerene! and how frightful when ruffled by the ſtorms of paſſion! A learned anatomiſt has deſcribed what muſcles of the face are convulſed by different paſſions, to which we refer. But there would be no end to the arguments and examples that might be given to prove that beauty is inſeperable from virtue. I dare ſay there are few who cannot recall to their memory ſeveral living inſtances of this. I ſhall only mention the amiable Lucinda; every one who ſaw her, loved her; prudence, ſweetneſs, modeſty, ſhone forth in her behaviour; in private life ſhe was always buſy in ſome uſeful or elegant employment, and left no idle time for tumultuous paſſions to prey upon her virgin beauty. Happy was the man who made her his wife! happy the children who called her mother!

Even old people of worthy characters have in their appearance ſomething that ſtrikes and pleaſes you, though you are unacquainted with them, on account of that decency and dignity of manners which virtue and goodneſs inſpire. It may be objected, that we often ſee very beautiful perſons extremely wicked; but I aſk, whether or not thoſe very features would appear incomparable more beautiful if the perſon had been good? I aſk, whether or not we feel more than ordinary pain in seeing such forms? This pain arises from observing an association of contrarieties. We imagine that here nature intended a beautiful mind and elegant form, but they are both perverted.

We have said, it is the hardest task in the world to form the heart to goodness, and perhaps it is still harder to persevere in those paths, on the account of the temptations of life, and the frailty of human nature. Hence arise many exceptions to the general theory, though they can never contradict the manifest indications of the original good intentions of nature in those apparently beauteous forms, where vice and wickedness, like robbers or wild beasts, have destroyed the original inhabitants, and taken possession of the dwelling by violence.

But these false appearances of beauty do not impose on every one. Ulysses found out Cresidia's character at the first sight. Fie, fie upon her, there's language in her eye, her cheek, her lip, nay her foot speaks, her wonton spirits look out at every joint and motion of her body, &c. Such also are unfortunate wretches of common fame, lost to the sense of modesty and virtue; like the Medusa fabled by the poets of old, who had been once extremely beautiful, but after she was debauched, there grew snakes in her hair, and she turned every one who looked upon her into stone.

From such examples we may see the divine beauty and force of virtue? and how much the young and innocent fair one shall be on her guard against the snares of life, for the sake of her honor, and for the sake of her beauty. There is a certain degree of reserve and severity of manners necessary to repel the rude and impertinent, lest the incautious and innocent should flutter round the dangerous flame, and burn her wings and perish. Hence the goodness of wisdom is fabled to have worn the Medusa's head upon her shield, and by the aspect of it confounded every one who dared to assault her virtue; and even though young people should happily escape the greatest calamity, yet a taste for gallantry, coquetry, and intrigue, spoils the genuine charms of beauty, and withers it before its time; besides that it diminishes the happy joys and confidence of mutual love, the greatest joy of life.

On the other hand, let these things teach the men to beware of counterfeits, because the mind is often painted. Let them also take care that they themselves are not under the power of irregular passions, which may render them blind to the most engaging beauty ; and having made a wrong choice, unjuſtly blame the whole ſex, or fooliſhly ſay, that beauty ſoon turns familiar to the lover. If our eyes are jaundiced, how can we judge of colours ?

SUPERFLUOUS WEALTH.

A Chineſe, who had made a great collection of jewels and precious ſtones, was exhibiting them to a friend, who, after he had viewed them, made his acknowledgments, as if theſe treaſures had been given to him. But why do you thank me thus, replied the owner, for truly I do not give them to you. I know it, replied the other ; but do I not look at them, and this is all you can do. You have no other good from theſe jewels than myſelf, except the trouble and anxiety which attends the keeper of them.

PRIDE.

Thoſe who are vain of any worldly advantages, may be reſembled to the child which is ſeated proudly upon a hillock of ſnow, boaſting of his elevation ;—when lo! the ſun breaks forth, the ſnow is melted, and the little one ſinks to the ground, and in a ſhort ſpace of time is deprived of what cauſed him ſo much joy and exultation.

COMPASSION.

The Governor of a province in China, who, inſtead of enriching himſelf, had become poor, through his liberality and benevolence, was leaving his government to his ſucceſſor, and returning home. Upon the road, he ſaw lying the remains of a poor man lately dead, deſtitute of the means of interment. The compaſſionate Governor could not paſs by ſuch a ſpectacle ; he ſtopped, and taking the beſt of his clothes, which was all the valuables he had with him, ordered them to be ſold, with the horſe that drew his litter, to defray the expences of the funeral. He then purſued his journey, but the following day other objects preſented, which required immediate aſſiſtance. Having nothing left now but the ox, which he had put to his litter inſtead of the horſe, he determined to ſell that alſo, and purſue his way on foot, by which means the wretched family received a momentary ſuccour. Some of the Governor's friends afterwards obſerved to him, that he had carried his humanity too far. You are miſtaken, he replied, my own heart tells me I was right. It was neceſſary that this poor man ſhould be preſerved, that he might live to maintain his family, and bring up children for his country ; but it was of little conſequence, that I ſhould return home on foot, ſuſtaining a ſlight inconvenience.

To the EDITOR of the MADRAS MONTHLY JOURNAL.

SIR,

In the course of heterogeneous portion of readings, a very singular and striking little narrative lately fell into my hands; and as you may not, at all times, be supplied with original matter, I am inclined to conjecture, that such interesting details may not prove unacceptable to the generality of your readers. The work, ("Jewish Letters") from which this little episade is transcribed, is very little known; being, if I mistake not, altogether out of print, for a number of years.

I am, SIR,

Your most obedient servant,

RECORDANS.

THE LOVES SEBASTIANO AND ZULIMA.

The only Daughter of one of the richest Moors in the Country fell deeply in Love with a Portuguese Slave.* The kind Lady, according to the established Custom in Africa, makes the first Advances. Neither the greatness of her fortune, nor the mean and servile condition of her Lover, could alter the resolution she had formed to marry him. She foresaw, indeed, very formidable obstacles in the way; but all could not make her lose hopes of succeeding in the execution of her project. The Portuguese, transported with his good fortune, offered his Mistress, the moment she discovered her passion, to carry her off to Lisbon. The thing was feasible; and the Nazarene might have escaped by the assistance of Zulima, for this was the name of our beautiful African. She was sensible that this expedient was the most rational; indeed it was almost the only one that could put her in possession of her wished happiness: But being a zealous Mahometan, she could by no means think of retiring to a country where she would be compelled to renounce her religion. I love you, Sebastiano, says she to her lover, more than I do myself. Grief will kill me if I am not made your wife; and yet I cannot be so profane, as to purchase my happiness at the price of my faith; not to mention the hazard we must run of being discovered in case we should fly. It is not impossible, my dear, but we may be both happy in this Country. Do but change your reli- gion, and ſo by turning Mahometan, remove the chief obſtacle that keeps us aſunder, and leave the reſt to me. The Nazarene was not ſo well eſtabliſhed in his religion as the Female Muſſulman. The deſire of recovering his liberty, and of ſecuring his miſtreſs, with the hopes of poſſeſſing a great eſtate, were temptations too ſtrong for him to reſiſt. He promiſed therefore to comply with every thing ſhe ſhould demand of him: And upon a particular promiſe, that he would renounce the Nazarene religion when required, the charming Moor indulged him all the favours that love can beſtow.

Theſe favours greatly increaſed the paſſion which Sebaſtiano felt for her: The fear he was under of loſing his dear Zulima daily augmented the flame; nor was his beautiful miſtreſs a whit behind in the tender fondneſs ſhe had conceived for him. Her whole attention was to give ſucceſs to the deſign ſhe had formed; but new difficulties ſtarted up every day At laſt on a certain day, when ſhe leaſt expected it, her father intimated to her, that he intended very ſoon to have her married to one of the principal men of the Country. With this meſſage the poor lady was thunder ſtruck. At firſt ſhe reſolved to caſt herſelf at her father's feet, and make an ingenuous confeſſion of all that had paſs'd between her and Sebaſtiano; but ſhe was deterred from this purpoſe by the dread of expoſing her lover to the rage of a provoked maſter, who might carry his reſentment to extremity.

In this perplexity ſhe reſolves to make uſe of a very extraordinary expedient, but one that would infallibly compaſs her deſign. She orders her lover to meet her at a certain place, whither ſhe was to go, under pretence of bathing, and would be attended only with one woman. Sebaſtiano being come to the place appointed, could ſcarce ſurvive the dreadful news, that his miſtreſs was juſt on the point of being delivered into the arms of another. Zulima bids him take heart; and told him, that ſhe hoped fortune would ſoon become more propitious to them both. She then ordered the woman that attended her, and was let into the ſecret, to go and inform the Cadi, that her miſtreſs was in ſuch a place, in the arms of a Nazarene. The ſervant obeyed; and the Judge coming in all haſte, attended with his guards, ſurpriſed the two lovers in the midſt of their warmeſt tranſports. They are immediately apprehended, and carried to trial. Zulima's father being told what accident had befallen his daughter, was ſeized with the utmoſt deſpair: he flew to the priſon to ſee her; but was told, that he could not be permitted to ſpeak with her till ſuch time as the trial was over: That they were juſt going to enquire whether the Nazarene ſlave would turn Mahometan, in which caſe the two lovers ſhould be married together, according to the law; but if he ſhall refuſe to accept of that condition, he ſhall be impaled, and the young woman drowned in the Sea.

Muſtapha, for that was the name of Zulima's father, knew too well what ſevere puniſhment would be inflicted on his daughter, in caſe the Portugueſe refuſed to turn Muſſulman. And indeed, the only motive that had brought him to the priſon to ſee them, was in order to try if the offers of wealth could prevail with the Nazarene to change his religion. He found it no hard taſk to gain his end; very little eloquence was ſufficient to perſuade his ſlave to prefer life to a cruel and ignominious death. Sebaſtiano readily agreed to embrace Zulima's religion, and to marry her; and the father thought himſelf happy in having an opportunity of preſerving the life of his only daughter, tho' upon very hard terms.

REFLECTIONS.

Few women in Europe would run ſuch hazard for the ſake of a lover. Their love, in general, is not ſo violent as that of the African Ladies; but then it is much more conſtant: One of the latter will ſometimes be fired with the ſtrongeſt paſſion, which in an inſtant will be quite extinguiſhed. Their affection is as mutable as the wind; they are fickle and wavering, as they are tender and paſſionate while the fit laſts.

It is certain, that the love which produces ſuch extraordinary effects is not commonly the moſt laſting. Nothing is more common in Europe, than to obſerve a great many young fellows fond of their miſtreſſes almoſt to diſtraction; and yet in leſs than two months they'll forſake theſe very miſtreſſes, and grow as ridiculouſly fond of othess, whoſe reign will be as ſhort and precarious: whereas perſons of maturity, whoſe paſſions are under government of reaſon, uſually contract a love and tenderneſs not to be extinguiſhed but with life.

The ſlavery in which the African Woman are kept, is one of the chief cauſes of their inconſtancy: they find a ſecret ſatisfaction in breaking through the reſtraint they are laid under. The very means that their huſbands make uſe of to prevent their being unfaithful, inspire them with the strongest desire of being so: they covet the forbidden pleasure in proportion to the penalty with which it is guarded. This conduct of their husbands is a standing proof that a change of the object in love is ever attended with some fresh delight; and hence they naturally fancy, that inconstancy affords an opportunity of enjoying the most exquisite pleasure.

The GUILLOTINE: A FRAGMENT.

By the Author of "ESSAYS AFTER THE MANNER OF GOLDSMITH."

I was crossing la rue de Vernueil with a small sprig of myrtle in my hand:—

"Je vous prie m'en donner," cried a little garcon citoyen, as I was turning round the corner.

"Pshaw!" said I.—

The poor boy hung down his head.

I had not gone ten paces before I began to reason and deliberate, and expostulate with myself on the subject.

"You might have answered him kindly," whispered good nature.—"You might have stopt a moment," cried Regret.—"You might have given him a small sprig," said Liberality.—"You are not a jot better than that poor boy," cried Humility.—"Pshaw! nonsense!" answered Fretfulness.—"A poor foolish boy," interrupted Pride.—"You had not much to spare," said Meanness.—"Let him go," cried Indifference; "he wou'dn't have played with it five minutes."——"Yes,—he would have danced, and skipt, and capered, and have sung Vive le Roi!—la Republique!—l'Empereur I should say, with his playfellows, and have been as happy as a prince."

The comparison was unlucky, but it served to touch the chord of sympathy.

Merciful Providence! how dost thou by thy fostering hand, and some little lapse of time, heal the wounds which the stabs of anarchy and revolution have made!

The boy don't care a fig about the matter, much less about a bit of myrtle.

Thou art but a bad grammarian, not to know the present tense from the past: and a very poor philosopher is he, who would not, nine times out of ten, prefer it. Well, he's gone his way, and the thing can no how be put to rights. But then the manner,—Pshaw!

There are not five more uncouth, unmusical, and ungrateful letters in the whole alphabet, whether it be the Syriac, Chaldaic, Sclavonian, High Dutch, Erse, or Chinese, than

P S H A W.

No modification, no transposition, no combination, can give sweetness to them: try all manner of ways, and it all won't do. They are barbarous, and unsonorous.

"I have hit it," said I.

"I hate the French; they are cruel, disloyal, fantastic, inconsequential people."

"The poor boy can't help that."

"It won't do," said I; "walk away as fast as you can."

"You are only getting from bad to worse."

"It was nothing in the world but ill nature."

Whether the poor garcon had turned to the right, or to the left, or up some ruelle, I can't say; but by some chance or other it happened that he stood right before me again.

I thought that he leered wistfully at the myrtle. I looked him full in the face: he was a rosy cheeked boy, with fine dark eyes, and a brown complexion. I thought I saw fiertè in his features.

"This," said I, "is a little Robespierre.

"Aimez vous l'Empereur?" said I to him.

The poor boy hung down his head, and his face reddened all over.

"Il n'importe," said I; "vous avez père, n'est-ce pas?"

"Non, Monsieur!"

"No father!—here," said I—"there's a bit of myrtle, my boy!"

Je vous remercie, Monsieur—bien obligé—mon père est mort, Monsieur."

"Dead?"

"Ah, mon Dieu! On lui a fait guillotiné!

"Gracious God! Guillotined? By whose order?

"Par l'ordre de l'infame Robespierre!" cried the poor boy, as his fine black eyes flash'd with fire. Sacre Dieu! mon pauvre père!"

I took hold of the boy's hand. Sanguinary monsters! Base, faithless, deceitful French! enemies of the universe and of yourselves! Savages, who offer up your fathers, your brothers, your countrymen, for ſhow and paſtime. If it was liberty you wanted,——The poor boy looked up in my face—

"If it was liberty you wanted, you might have ſought her in the juſt aſſurances of morals, of purer manners, of your religion. They would have required no horrid ſacrifices; and would by decrees have changed the bitter dregs of pride and oppreſſion into the ſweetneſs of fellowſhip and brotherhood. The Almighty loves not that we ſhould ſhed blood, nor can any policy juſtify it to the mind of reaſon and humanity."

I found that I had hurried with the laſt ſentences of my apoſtrophe to within a few doors of my lodging. I had kept faſt hold of the poor boy's hand all the way.

"Vous êtes Anglois Monſieur!" cried the boy, quite pleaſed.

"Oui, ma foi!" returned I; "et priſonnier auſſi."

The poor boy ſhrugged up his ſhoulders.

"Je n'ai plus de mauvais humeur, mon enfant," ſaid I: but I would not have you think, child, that an Engliſhman, becauſe he is rough and uncourtly in his manners, does not carry a little humanity in his breaſt to ſpare to the wretched and unhappy of any country. Venez, déjûner, mon enfant," ſaid I, pulling him up ſtairs by the arm, "and we will talk this matter over."

I would not at this moment have changed places with an EMPEROR!

GROWN GENTLEMEN TAUGHT TO DANCE.

It is curious to trace the riſe of ideas that have given birth to ſubjects, either dramatic or graphic, which have contributed to the entertainment of the public. The print of grown gentlemen taught to dance is ſtill extant, and was produced by the following circumſtance:—A ſet of young men, ſtudents in the Academy, which was not then royal, and for the learned profeſſions, &c. uſed frequently to meet at a coffee-houſe ſituate in a corner in Chandos-ſtreet, Covent garden. Mr. John Collet, the celebrated graphic humouriſt, was one evening of this party, when a Gentleman was reading, either from a newſpaper or handbill, an advertiſement publiſhed by that renowned geſticulator, Mr. Hart, of Eſſex Houſe*, Eſſex ſtreet

* The reſidence of the Earls of Eſſex, has, within living memory, had ſeveral very remarkable tenants. The laſt tenant of this manſion was the Reverend Mr. Linſay,

Strand, inviting "Grown Gentlemen of the cities of London and Weſtminſter (to which the profeſſor ſtated his academy was equally contiguous, and for whom it was conſequently equally convenient,) to learn to dance."

Dancing, ſaid the great profeſſor, was a ſcience practiſed by Socrates, and recommended by every wiſe man from the time of this philoſopher downward. He then, in language peculiar to himſelf and which ſmacked of the profeſſion, inaſmuch as it might be termed a verbal dance, proceeded to diſplay the advantage that muſt be derived from the attainment of this elegant art; though we think he did not quote either the examples of Lord Lanſborough or Sir Philip Figurein.

The reading of this advertiſement brought to the recollection of one of the auditors the following ſtanzas, written by Garrick upon the ſame ſubject, and recognizing the ſame eminent character:—

"Marſeilles* no more ſhall boaſt his art,
That form'd the youth of France,
While you inſtruct, ingenious Hart!
Grown Gentlemen to dance.
Marſeilles but bent the pliant twig,
You ſtrike a bolder ſtroke;
You ſoften rocks, make mountains jigg,
And bend the knotted Oak."

While the Gentleman was repeating this poem, Collet had taken out his pencil, and in the courſe of a ſhort time he made a ſketch, which afterward formed the baſis of that truly humorous print upon this ſubject that is ſtill to be found in the collections of the curious.

THE MISTAKE.

The late King of Pruſſia's father uſed to dreſs in ſo plain a manner, that, when he travelled about his ſtates, ſuch of his ſubjects who did not know him, treated him with no other reſpect than they have ſhewn an ordinary perſon. Once as he was riding about Berlin, without attendants, and very plainly clad, he perceived a young woman of a gigantic ſtature, being near ſeven feet high, digging in the fields. It is well known, that the King had a particular predilection for tall men; and as his greateſt paſſion lay that way, he ſpared no expence to procure them from all parts of Europe, for forming, (which he at length accomplished) a regiment of giants and grenadiers. Upon seeing this tall woman, he imagined that a couple of the same species must produce equally large children. He accordingly dismounted, and, coming up to the peasant, entered into conversation with her; and was overjoyed to hear, that she was but nineteen years old; as yet a virgin; and that her father was a shoe-maker. Hereupon, he sat down, and wrote the following note to the colonel of his guards;

* A very famous french dancing maſter.

" You are to marry the bearer of this note with the tallest of my grenadiers. Take care, that the ceremony be performed immediately, and in your presence. You must be responsible to me for the execution of this order: 'Tis absolute; and the least delay or deviation will make you criminal in my sight.

FREDERICK.

The King gave this letter to the young-woman, without informing her of it's contents, and ordered her to deliver it punctually, according to the directions, and not to fail, as it was on an affair of great consequence; he afterwards made her a handsome present, and continued his route.

The young woman who had not the least imagination that it was the King who had spoken to her, and believing, therefore, that it was indifferent whether the letter was delivered by any other person, so it came safe to hand, made a bargain with an old woman, whon she charged with the commission, laying an express injunction on her to say, that she had it from a man of such a garb and mien. The old woman faithfully executed her message. The colonel surprised at the contents of the letter, could not reconcile them with the age and figure of the bearer; yet the order being peremptory, he thought he could not, without danger, dispense with obeying it, and fancied that his master wanted to punish the soldier for some misdemeanour, by matching him in so disagreeable a manner. In short, the marriage was celebrated in his presence, to the great regret of the grenadier, whilst the old woman, elate with joy, assumed an air of the highest satisfaction.

Some time after, the King, upon his return to Berlin, was eager to see the couple he had ordered to be married. When presented, he fell into a desperate passion. The Colonel in vain, endeavoured to justify himself; but the King was implacable, till the old woman confessed the truth, finishing her tale by raising her eyes to Heaven, and thanking Providence for conferring on her so signal and unlooked for an happiness!

☞ What pretenſions the French Journaliſt may have to originality, as to the above trifle, we will not take upon us to decide, nor indeed is it worth the inquiry.

We remember, however, ſeeing in a London Magazine, publiſhed nearly half a century ago, a ſomewhat ſimilar ſtring of improbabilities, which were, we believe, denominated "Wonderful Sights."

We alſo received ſomething of this kind from another correſpondent, to which we gave inſertion. The French Journaliſt, however in point of method and ironical ſatire, has certainly the ſuperiority; if any thing like ſuperiority can, with critical decorum, be aſſigned to ſuch tiny efforts of the muſe.

EDIT.

FRAGMENT.

BY WILLIAM PRESTON, JUNIOR,

LATE A LIEUTENANT IN THE EAST INDIA COMPANY'S SERVICE.

(Written at the Age of Sixteen Years.)

The reader will peruſe the following lines with indulgence, while he conſiders the youth of the writer, and with intereſt and ſympathy, when he reflects on his early and heroic death. They were written immediately before the embarkation of the author for India. After remaining there four years, and ſurmounting all the effects of a climate fatal to ſo many, he fell in action, in the battle of Delhi, under General Lake, on the 11th September, 1803, in the 21ſt year of his age. The only conſolation remaining to the afflicted father of this gallant and accompliſhed young man, is the reflection, that if his career was ſhort, it was unſtained by crime, and cloſed in glory.

From the calm bow'rs of learning; and the ſhades,
Where erſt I mus'd th' inſtructive claſſic lore,
From the parental ſide, the ſhelter ſafe,
Of a fond father's late endearing roof,
Launch'd out, at once, upon the waſte immenſe,
Of Life's broad ocean: aid Me, gracious Heav'n,
With Honour, Fame, and Virtue to arrive
At the laſt Goal, which all mankind to reach
Are fated; when run out this race call'd life.
Farewell!—my Country! O my Native Land,
Farewell!—that land which nurs'd my youthful years,

And train'd me up to manhood! could my mind
Dethrone her recollection, draw around
The veil of dark Oblivion, o'er the ſcenes
Theſe eyes have witneſs'd, and thy guilty plains,
Delug'd with native blood! the dire effects
Of civil fury, which together drove—
O Erin!—hapleſs Erin!——drove thy ſons
To wade for maſt'ry through each other's blood.—
Yet ſtill thou art my country.—Still, ſhall I
Still, Glory to be call'd Hibernian born!
O country, honour'd as my native ſoil!
O honour'd, yet ſtill more, whoſe boſom holds
A lov'd—and loving—Father! Yet my ſoul
Clings to the ſoil which bore me! and to part,
And—oh—perhaps—to part for ever!—wakes,
Wakes—in my heart—a latent feeling known,
At abſence only from what's held ſo dear.——
Ye Cypreſs glooms, whoſe weeping boughs o'erhang
That hallow'd ſpot, and ſhade that urn around,
Which holds the aſhes of my honour'd Mother!*
How ſweet a haunt! your dark embow'ring ſhades,
Abſtracted in deep thought, where I have ſtray'd.
And oft your ſhades have witneſs'd, when retir'd
Both from the noiſe and clamour of the crowd,
In ſullen contemplation would I muſe,
And oft invoke the tuneful nine to come,
With influence, from the Pegaſean fount;
And call around me all the pow'rs of ſong,
In ſober Melancholy's garb array'd.—
And now, O ſhades, Ye witneſs, for he muſt
Witneſs—my long—my ſad—my laſt farewell.
No more may I the thoughtful paths frequent;
No more recline beneath the gloomieſt ſhade;
No more delight me with the whiſpering ſound
Of breezes, ſtealing thro' each dark receſs;—
No more, attentive, liſten to the voice
Of ſportive echo, anſwering back my lays.—
How oft, at fall of evening, have I climbed
Along the ſcope of yon hoar hill's aſcent;
And viewed beneath me, from his miſty top,

* Her maiden name was Martha Boles, an elegant and beautiful woman, firſt wife of the writer's father.

The wide extended Ocean, by the winds
Infuriate toſs'd! or ſaw its glaſſy face
While ev'ry wave lay motionleſs and calm,
Reflect the craggs, impendent o'er its deep,
Its placid boſom ſeeming to invite
The credulous mariner to truſt the ſmiles
Of Ocean's faithleſs and tremendous gulph!——
Thrice happy Ye! whom Fate's beheſt ordains
The ſimple tenants of the rural ſhade!
Moſt enviable ſtate; enjoy your bliſs,
And thank kind Providence! my lot is ſet,
In ſuch a ſtation, as to roam beyond
My native limits, to far diſtant tribes,
Of different hues, and of a ſpeech unknown.—
How vain the projects all of feeble man!
Fondly did I feliciate myſelf,
On the domeſtic lot; and little thought
Myſelf ordain'd to travel o'er the deep,
To find my portion ſet—far—far—away,
In diſtant climes—attainable by few.——
  Ah me! now ſorrowing muſt I part thoſe ſcenes,
Endear'd by long acquaintance; where a child
I've ſportive ſtrayed—and grown to riper years.
Have known to feel departure more ſevere,
And loſe thoſe friends, companions of my youth.
And, yet—my Father—oh! had Heaven indulg'd
My wiſh! yet, wiſe are Heav'n's ſupreme decrees.—
Me honour calls—my Father's wiſh incites,
That wiſh—moſt ſure—the welfare of his child
His wiſh determines—and my welfare tells
That I—ſhould wiſh the ſame! Fortune invites—
Already Fancy wafts me to the ſhores
Of rich Hindoſtan, and around I view,
The richeſt products bounteous Nature gives.—

TO MY COY MISTRESS.

Ah! Chloe, too well does your Corydon known
  That your boſom, ſo fair yet ſo frigid, reſembles,
In more points than one, two cold hillocks of ſnow,
  See Cupid cloſe by, how he ſhakes and he trembles;
And tho' he is naked, he feels not ſo bold
  To fly to a boſom he knows is ſo cold!

POOR ISABELLA'S COMPLAINT.

Keen blows the wind—I am naked and weary,
O'er the wild world do I wander forlorn;
Pity me ſtrangers, my path it is dreary,
Full oft are my feet ſorely rent with the thorn!

The ſky for my roof, and a ſtone for my pillow,
In the damp paths do I nightly remain;
Toſs'd on the tempeſts of life's angry billow,
Oh! ſay has not ISABEL cauſe to complain?

No tongue ſpeaks to her in the language of feeling,
No cheek wears the warm ſunny grace of a ſmile.
O'er her boſom the ice of deſpair is faſt ſtealing,
Nought, naught can her ſoul's heavy anguiſh beguile!

Be huſh'd for a moment, ye blaſts of December,
And let the ſad pray's of an outcaſt ariſe;
Let the rich and the happy my ſorrows remember,
And baniſh the tears from my luſterleſs eyes.

Thoſe eyes were once fam'd for their ſparkling and beauty;
How oft have I heard they were bright as the ſun:
But ISABEL wander'd from honour and duty
She liſten'd, ſhe truſted—and Oh! was undone!

Now worn by diſeaſe, and the victim of ſorrow,
I call upon death to aleviate my woe;
Unknowing what fate has reſerv'd for the morrow,
Impatient I wait for the finiſhing blow!

Ye maidens ſo rich, in the ſpring-tide of beauty,
O ye who are lovely, and virtuous as fair,
Gaze, gaze on this cheek, when you're wand'ring from duty,
This cheek ſo impreſs'd with the furrows of care!

Nay—doubt not, it once was the throne of the graces;
If once blaz'd with colours as bright as your own;
But mis'ry has left there her eloquent traces;
The tinges of health and of virtue are flown!

Now ſlumb'ring on down, in the manſion of gladneſs,
Behold the gay ſpoiler who blaſted my bloom;
He ſleeps, while theſe ſenſes are verging on madneſs,
But patience! for God ſhall irradiate my gloom.

Ye rains, that descend and ye thunders that roll,
Let fall your wild wrath on my shelterless head;
No sigh shall escape from my weak tortur'd soul,
The spirit of anger and murm'ring is dead!

This heart seems to warm me, it's journey is ended,
The cold gale of death o'er my palsied frame sweeps:
The pulses of life and of pain seem suspended,
Slow, slow, thro' its channel the lagging blood creeps!

O father of mercies! thy hand will receive me,
The glories of heav'n on my soul shall arise,
And perchance, ev'n those who refus'd to relieve me,
May then drop a tear, where POOR ISABEL lies!

ODE TO MONEY.

Thou sweetest bliss of human life,
Uniting closely man and wife;
Thou canst the virgin's heart decoy,
And give old maids a sparkling joy.
Without thy aid, nought shines on earth
Of learning, title, or high birth.
E'en Saints above their patents owe
To canonizing Gold below.
Thou, Church and State's puissant good,
Canst rectify imperial blood!
Doctors, whom various symptoms guide,
In thy appearance most confide.
Conflicting Lawyers, two, agree,
When they refer the cause to thee.
Bent to thy shrine all trades adore,
Exulting in prolific store;
O! thou, who rulest ev'ry head,
That plods by day, or schemes in bed,
Thou Guinea! stamp of Britain's love!
Thou Georgium Sidus, from above!
How thou canst cheer the poor man's heart!
Thou then do'st act thy noblest part.
But when thou talk'st a vicious freak,
To bribe the knave, corrupt the weak,
Or liv'st the heartless miser's joy,
Thou then art worse than base alloy.

To Miss Aurelia,

(On her weeping at her Siſter's wedding.)

Ceaſe fair Aurelia, ceaſe to mourn,
  Lament not Hannah's happy ſtate,
You may be happy in your turn,
  And ſerve the treaſure you regret.

With love united Hymen ſtands,
  And ſoftly whiſpers to your charms,
"Meet but your lover in my bands,
"You'll find your ſiſter in his arms."

To my Swift Mistress.

As a ſample of charms all divine,
  When Chloe her ankles diſplay'd,
Ah, muſt I for ever repine,
  Thus tempted and flouted, I ſaid!
She ſmil'd: from my eager embrace
  Eſcap'd, and was ſoon out of ſight;
Ah! why then will Fancy retrace
  Thoſe charms that thus aided her flight!

The Devout Widow.

Dark in her weeds as any coal,
  Nigretta wept her widow'd ſtate,
And nearly for a month, poor ſoul,
  Sigh'd, wept, and moan'd at a ſad rate,
But not content with grief, ſhe vows
  She'll ne'er be pleas'd again: ſo ſaid,
So done; ſhe ſtorms about the houſe,
  And every day ſo ſcolds the maid,
That Betty anſwer'd in a pet,
  "Nay, madam, if you thus arraign
The will of Heaven, I'd lay a bet
  My maſter will return again.
And puniſh your rebellious will!"—
  "Ah! Betty," cried the pious fair,
"From hence be all my murmurs ſtill,
  And reſignation all my care!"

G. O. BY THE COMMANDER IN CHIEF.

The Commander in Chief calls the particular attention of officers commanding native corps to the 8th and 9th paragraphs of the 18th section of the code of regulations, under the head "Recruiting," and directs, that should the ceremony therein prescribed have been omitted on the enlistment of any individual of the corps under their command, the omission shall be immediately rectified in the manner pointed out in the 12th and 13th paragraphs of the 4th section of the Standing Orders circulated to native battalions under date the 13th March 1806.

December 27, 1806.

The Commander in Chief derived extreme satisfaction from his inspection of the squadron of horse artillery this morning.

It was peculiarly gratifying to Sir John Cradock, who witnessed the birth of this establishment, to observe the rapid progress, they made towards perfection; and his Excellency returns his warmest acknowledgments to colonel Bell, commandant of artillery, for the pains he has bestowed upon this infant institution, and requests that he will communicate to the commanding officer, captain Noble, and the other officers of the squadron, how sensible he is, that their appearance in the field, with the view of their regularity and good order in quarters, could not be effected without the most laudable and unanimous exertion.

His Excellency entertains the warmest hopes, that the honorable Court of Directors, may view the establishment in so favorable a light, that an extension will be directed, and that in its due proportion, an Arm, which has had so powerful an influence upon the warfare of the present day in Europe, will not be denied to the Military Character in India.

Fort William,—December 15, 1806.

A dispatch, of which the following is a copy, has this day been received from his Excellency Rear Admiral Sir Thomas Troubridge, Baronet, by the Honorable the Governor General in Council.

To the Honorable Sir GEORGE HILARO BARLOW, Bart.
Governor General in Council,

FORT WILLIAM,

HONORABLE SIR,

I have great pleasure in enclosing for your information, copies of two letters from Captain Rainier, of His Majesty's ship Caroline, which I have this instant received by express from Malacca, giving an account of the great success which has attended that ship on her cruise to the Eastward, and detailing in modest terms, a very brilliant action he has had, with the Maria Riggersbergen, Dutch frigate of thirty-six guns, and three corvettes, assisted by several gun-boats in the Road of Batavia; and of his having captured the frigate and driven on shore the corvettes.

I also enclose for your information an account of the Enemy's ships and vessels captured and run on shore during the cruise, and a list of the killed and wounded on board the Caroline.

I have the honor to be,
Honorable Sir,
Your most obedient humble Servant,
(Signed) T. TROUBRIDGE.

His Majesty's ship Blenheim, Port Cornwallis, November 1!, 1806.

P. S. 13th.

I enclose a copy of a letter received from Captain Rainier since his arrival at Port Cornwallis.

(Signed) T. T.

[Here follows the letter from Captain Rainier, published in our Journal for December 1806.]

To His Excellency SIR THOMAS TROUBRIDGE, Bart. Rear Admiral of the White, and Commander in Chief, &c. &c. &c.

His Majesty's Ship Caroline, off Malacca, 4th November 1806.

SIR,

I beg leave further to acquaint you, that early in the morning after I left Batavia, in company with the Maria and Zeerop, I fell in with the Dutch Company's ship Guina Antonetta, which I observed them to cut from Onrust, on our approach; I sent a boat on board her, and procured her Log-Book, but as she was dismantled, and no people on board, I concluded she would have been a great detention to us on our passage, as I must have taken her in tow, I consequently left her.

I am ſorry to acquaint you, that on the 23d ultimo, Lieutenant Lemage whom I ſent in charge of the Maria, run on board the Zeerop brig which I had in tow, and carried the frigate's bowſprit and foremaſt, as well as the brig's foreyard, when it was not in his power to avoid it, at which time both ſhips were cleared for action for four ſtrange ſail that were in ſight, which I at firſt ſuppoſed to be the enemy's ſquadron, and had they proved ſuch, the Maria in conſequence of this muſt have fallen into their hands.

On the 20th ultimo, I obſerved a ſhip lying at anchor off Mintow, under Portugueſe colours, at which time I hoiſted Dutch, and ſent an officer on board her, ordering him to carry on the deception, in conſequence of which the Portugueſe Captain confeſſed and ſigned papers relative to the Dutch property he had on board, as well as the ſhipping of his cargo, and his future deſtination which I thought ſufficient grounds for his detention, and ſhe is now in company in order to be proceeded againſt in an Admiralty Court the firſt opportunity.

I herewith encloſe the ſtate and condition of His Majeſty's ſhip Caroline, under my command.

I have the honor to be,
Sir, Your moſt obedient Servant,
(Signed) P. RAINIER.

We were ten days from Batavia to the Great Caromins, and have been greatly detained in conſequence of the Maria carrying away her fore-maſt.

N. B. William Longmore, (S.) who is in the liſt of wounded, died on the 26th ultimo, the remainder are all doing as well as can be expected. As the Maria is ſome diſtance from us, it is my intention to run into the roads and take as much water on board as I can, while ſhe is coming up.

His Majeſty's ſhip Caroline, Penang, Nov. 13, 1806.

SIR,

Having omitted ſtating in my letter of the 18th ultimo, that the Dutch on that day ſaved me the trouble of ſetting fire to their ſtores on Onruſt, by doing it themſelves,

I therefore requeſt you will add the ſame to my letter.

I have the honor to be,
Sir, Your obedient Servant,

Calcutta Supreme Court,—December 13, 1806.

The half yearly Sessions of Oyer and Terminer, and General Goal Delivery, were opened at the New Court House on Thursday last, the 4th current, before the Honorable Sir Henry Russell, Knight, Chief Justice; the Honorable Sir John Royds, Knight, and the Honorable Sir William Burroughs, Baronet, Puisne Judges, forming a full Bench of the Supreme Court.

Sir Henry Russell addressed the Grand Jury in a clear and perspicuous charge, shortly defining the duties they were called upon to discharge, and affording some directions for their guidance in the investigation of the cases that were to be brought before them.

He began with expressing his regret to find that the Calendar of the present Sessions, presented a much greater number of offences than usual. Of these, no less than six were homicides, each deferring from the others, no doubt in degree of guilt, and in their particular circumstances; yet in all these cases, Sir Henry recommended to the Jury to consider it as sufficient to attend to the evidence in support of the bill; and, if from that, there appeared sufficient ground to send the prisoner to be tried, they would in that case find the bill, without attending to any exculpatory evidence in behalf of the accused; he, at the same time recommended to the Jury, that in those cases, where the evidence in support of the bill was deemed sufficient, that they should find the bill for murder, generally, leaving it to the Court to apply the evidence and to determine the precise nature of the crime. The course thus recommended would prove beneficial both to the public and to the party accused; beneficial to the public, inasmuch, as it would prevent the accused if proved to be guilty, from escaping the punishment due to his offence, in consequence of any defective finding of the bill; and beneficial to the accused, since, if he should be acquitted under a bill found for murder, it secured him from being again indicted for the same offence: whereas, if the bills were found for manslaughter or homicide, he might, although acquitted, be again indicted for murder on the same offence, and brought to trial on that charge, when the witnesses by whom he might establish his innocence were perhaps either dead or unable to be brought forward in his defence; so that by finding the bill for murder generally, the prisoner if acquitted, was acquitted for ever.

With regard to the proof in cases of murder, Sir Henry observed that, that crime could rarely be substantiated by any other than circumstantial evidence, for no man, as might readily be supposed, would be so rash and unguarded as to commit the heinous crime of murder in the presence of witnesses, who could be produced to establish his guilt: nevertheless circumstantial evidence was not less to be relied upon than direct or positive testimony. A number of minute circumstances, related by different persons, who could not be aware of the particular bearing and relation of these facts, when connected with others, in themselves also seemingly minute, rendered such testimony less subject to fabrication, at the same time that the whole, when connected, may often afford a chain and mass of evidence sufficient to carry irresistible conviction to the mind, and such as no ingenuity could fabricate; while, on the other hand, direct or positive evidence may be invented by malice and supported by perjury.

Two of the cases of the homicide contained in the present Calendar, occurred in duels; and, by the law of England, killing in a duel, was considered as murder; yet the tender feelings of humanity, and consideration for the circumstances in which gentlemen are often placed by the laws of honour, had usually prevailed, in giving a milder construction to this offence; and although such considerations might perhaps be admissible, when applying to the cases of persons in the higher situations of life, it would be dangerous indeed were they to be extended farther: the parties in the two cases now to be brought before them, were common soldiers, whose quarrels might certainly be well settled by more homely means, than by resorting to the dangerous and unlawful practice of duelling. It is usual when gentlemen go out to fight, to be attended by seconds, who always endeavour to the utmost, to mitigate the rigours of the laws of honour; and who at least are particularly careful to prevent any improper weapons from being used; while the soldiers go out to fight unattended, and use their muskets, which, at a moderate distance were almost certain of taking a fatal effect. A similar case, to those now to come before them, lately occurred and was tried last Sessions; and it was to be apprehended that the lenity then shewn, has had an unfavourable effect, and encouraged the repetition of this offence. It was therefore necessary that this practice should be nipt in the bud, and that the severest judgment of the law should be denounced against such offenders, unless where favourable circumstances appeared to admit of mitigation. If this practice were not checked, the army it was to be feared, would reach the most alarming state, and there would be more danger of our soldiers falling by the hands of one another, than by the hands of the enemy; on these, and other grounds, stated by the Lord Chief Justice, it became the duty of all, in their respective stations, to put a stop to so dangerous and alarming an evil.

The Calendar contained also an indictment for maiming. Here Sir Henry distinctly defined this offence, and quoted the law as applied to it; observing, in reference to the particular instance to which their enquiry would be directed, that if a person contemplating the maiming of another, should in the silent hours of sleep carry such intention into effect, the offence came equally under the act, as under any circumstances attending the commission of this crime.

There was a case of Forgery to be brought before them, a crime which although in this country, not usually considered as capital, was of the most heinous and alarming nature, more especially as so large an amount of the public property was now invested in negociable securities. In the bill for this offence, there were a number of counts. If the Jury saw any one of those counts supported or proved, it was sufficient for them to find the bill, which he recommended to them to do generally, without particularizing the count on which they found the bill, leaving it to the Court to apply the evidence.

The Chief Justice concluded his charge with remarking, that all that he had said, and the general duties of Grand Juries had been so often repeated in that place, as to render it unnecessary to detain them longer, nor was he aware that any of the cases to come before them required any further or more particular direction.

The charge being closed, the Grand Jury withdrew, and found several bills; two in particular for murder; the one against Alexander Moore, a Soldier, for the murder of Owen McInnes, at Muttra; the second against James Dempsey, also a Soldier, for the murder of Charles Crowley, at Allahabad.

A bill was at the same time found against Lieut. Charles Ryan, for the murder of Lieut. Corry in a duel at Cawnpore.

The above three trials came on in Court, in the course of the same day. The Petty Jury on each, returned a verdict of —"Manslaughter."

The trial of James Biron, a Master in the Pilot Service, for the murder of a female negro of 7 or 8 years of age, engaged the Court on the whole of Friday. The Jury after retiring for nearly half an hour returned their verdict—"Not Guilty."

On Saturday two natives, a Bengalese and his wife, were put upon their trial for the murder of a Hindoo in the town of Calcutta. It appeared in evidence that the deceased had entered the House of the Prisoners, and that soon afterwards from the noise of groans and some other suspicious circumstances, the neighbours were alarmed and gave notice of their suspicions to the Police. On searching the house, the deceased was found buried under the floor, and a cot or bedstead placed over the spot in order to conceal the appearance of the newly replaced earth. The Prisoners pleaded in defence, that the husband suspecting a criminal intercourse between the deceased and his wife, an altercation took place on that subject which proceeding to blows, a serious scuffle ensued between the parties, in which the deceased was unfortunately killed. The Jury returned a verdict of—"Manslaughter."

On Monday the trial of James Campbell came on, for the maiming a Native Woman in the dead of the night, at Chunar. After a patient inveſtigation the Jury found a verdict of "Guilty;" and the Priſoner, under the Coventry Act, received ſentence of Death.

Harbour of Calcutta,—December 20.

Chain Moorings are now laying down for ſecuirng ſhipping abreaſt of Calcutta, upon a plan, which, we underſtand, the moſt competent judges entertain very ſanguine aſſurances, will be productive of great ſaving in ground tackling to the ſhips that are brought to them, and render veſſels much leſs liable to get a drift, than by the ordinary method hitherto adopted here, in mooring them under fours, with their own anchors.

Moorings for ſix ſail, are already laid down, and ſeveral ſhips have been hauled to them during the preſent week: they are to be laid for twenty-four ſail for the preſent, in tiers three deep, from Chaundpaul Ghaut to the Bankſhall; and from the Old Fort to Beebee Roſs's Ghaut.

The charge for laying at the moorings is two hundred and fifty ſicca rupees per month for a ſhip exceeding five hundred tons burthen; for a veſſel of 500 tons or under, two hundred ſicca rupees, per month.

Mr. William Clarke, of the H. C Marine, is appointed Harbour Maſter of the port of Calcutta, to ſuperintend the Moorings.

Bombay,—December 27, 1806.

On Wedneſday morning his Majeſty's 77th regiment, under the command of Col. Whitelocke, was inſpected at Colaba by Lieutenant General Nicolls, for the laſt time in India, after a period of eighteen years ſervice in this country. It is almoſt needleſs to obſerve that on this occaſion the regiment acquitted itſelf in ſuch a manner as to deſerve the entire approbation of the Commander in Chief, who expreſſed his ſatisfaction at its appearance and ſteadineſs under arms and the preciſion with which it went through its different evolutions, and which reflected the greateſt credit on Col. Whitelocke, officers and men. After having paſſed in review-order, performed the manual and platoon exerciſes, and gone through ſeveral manœuvres, the regiment formed itſelf into the hollow ſquare, and was addreſſed by Lieutenant General Nicolls in a neat and appropriate ſpeech, on the ſubject of drafting. We do not preſume to give an account of what was ſaid by the veteran Commander in Chief on this occaſion, but we truſt that we ſhall be excuſed if we obſerve the happy and pointed manner in which he urged to the men the opportunity they now had of again ſerving their country in India, with the ſame honor and credit to themſelves as they had hitherto done, by entering into either of the two regiments which were alone offered to their choice, only becauſe they happened to be the weakeſt in point of numbers, but which weakneſs was ſolely owing to the extraordinary gallantly which they had ſhewn on arduous occaſions, and which had ſtamped ſuch a character on thoſe regiments as to render them worthy of the ſoldiers of the 77th.

It would be idle to deduce from its appearance on parade or from the manner in which it performed its evolutions on Wedneſday, any commendations on a regiment whoſe military diſcipline and excellence is beſt learnt, in its gallant, ſteady and ſucceſsful conduct in the field, and in its exemplary regularity and order in garriſon.

The 77th regiment came to Bombay in the year 1788.

The following is a ſhort enumeration of the different ſervices in which ſince that time it has been employed.

It was firſt employed under Sir R. Abercrombie, at the taking of Cannanore, in 1790.

The campaign of 1791, under Sir Robert Abercrombie, againſt Tippoo Sultaun, and a ſecond campaign againſt him in 1792.

At the taking of Cochin, in 1795.

At the taking of Columbo, in 1796.

A campaign againſt the Rajah of Cotiote, under General Stuart, in 1797.

A campaign 1798-9, againſt Tippoo Sultaun under Lieutenant General Stuart.

A campaign againſt Dhoondia Wahab, under the command of General Sir A. Welleſley, in 1800.

A campaign againſt the Rebels of Cotiote and Wynaad, under the late Colonel Stevenſon, in 1801.

At the taking of Pangelamcourtchy, in 1801.

A campaign againſt the Rajah of Calacoil, under Colonel Agnew in 1801.

A campaign againſt the Bulliam Rajah, under General Sir A. Welleſley, K. B. in 1802.

A third campaign againſt the Rebels to the provinces of Wynaad and Cotiote, under the late Colonel Montreſor, in 1802-3:

Though we cannot but congratulate our countrymen on the near proſpect they enjoy of once more viſiting their native land, a privilege which they have well earned by their long and arduous gallant ſervices, we muſt at the ſame time regret that this ſettlement will ſo ſoon loſe ſo agreeable a portion of its ſociety. India ſo many of its brave defenders, we truſt, however, that the numerous advantages which the Britiſh ſoldiers poſſeſſes in India, will induce many of them to obey the call of the gallant General who inſpected them.

Bombay,—December 6, 1806.

An unuſual alarming circumſtance occurred to two Gentlemen about 7 o'clock, on Sunday morning, on the Iſland of Salſette in the neighbourhood of the village of Corlee, as they were riding towards the Bungaloes of General Macpherſon, by three full grown Tygers croſſing the new road, about fifty yards in front of their horſes. The ferocious animals obſerved the travellers with indifference having it is ſuppoſed ſatiated themſelves during the night. After croſſing the road they crouched cloſe by the way ſide, as if in the act of ſpringing upon their prey until the gentlemen who undiviatingly kept their pace paſſed, when they were perceived to betake themſelves to the hills of Powee.

A Bearer followed with a loaded fuſil, which it was not deemed prudent to diſcharge, for had one of them been wounded it is now more than probable that the other would have been irritated, to the imminent danger of the party, who were otherwiſe defenceleſs.

This occaſion, together with the recent frequency of theſe dreadful inhabitants of the Jungles having been obſerved, it is hoped will operate as a caution to paſſengers, in not placing too much dependance on their numbers being decreaſed, ſince the contrary too evidently appears. Nor have they till lately been ſeen ſo near to Bombay, as in the preſent inſtance, which is not two miles from the cauſeway of Sion, which connects the Iſland of Salſette to Bombay.

Columbo,—December 3, 1806.

The anniverſary of St. Andrew falling this year upon a Sunday, the ſons of the Saint poſtponed their annual ball till Monday evening, when it was numerouſly attended by all the beauty and faſhion of Columbo, among whom, in honor of the day, tartan dreſſes appeared in every poſſible variety. The ball-room was ornamented with taſte and judgement;

among others a beautiful transparency of the arms of Scotland attracted much attention. The enlivening dance continued with much spirit till a late hour, and the animation of the Scotch reel occasionally relieved the regularity of the country dance. The judicious arrangements adopted by the stewards, also deserve commendation; the most cordial good humour prevailed throughout; many appropriate toasts were given, and in the course of the evening the following lines were handed about:—

In the deeds of their arms, see our forefathers rise!
While such threats of defiance, flash fierce from their eyes,
As when dauntless they rush'd thro' the ocean's wild storms
And braved death's worst terror in all his dire forms:
See each shade, how he snatches his helmet and shield,
And again stalks a hero across the red field.
With the deeds of our fathers thus full in our view,
Let us nobly determine their steps to pursue
And proud to have sprung from those heroes of old,
Whose spirits were never by fortune controul'd,
Like them, let us grasp at immortal renown,
And wrest from the Corsican boaster, his crown!
That when the wild conflict of nations is o'er,
And heroes shall bleed, and shall conquer no more,
When the tumult of battle is hush'd once again,
And Peace shall resume, her so long banish'd reign,
The song of the bard, shall resound with our name
And ages on ages promulgate our fame.

The following is the French account of the engagement between His Majesty's Frigate the Phæton, Captain J. Wood; Harrier sloop of War, and Semillante French Frigate, commanded by Captain Moutard, in the bay of Saint Hyacinth.

"On the 4th of Thermidor, year 13, about one o'clock in the afternoon, the look out on shore signaled two large vessels to windward; close in with the land, steering towards St. Hyacinth bay. The wind was very light from the N. E. which prevented the frigate from weighing and running out of the bay, although every measure and precaution was taken for that effect, the hammocks piped up and all ready for action. About a quarter past one we could perceive the two vessels under all sail, at a distance of about a league and half.

"One of them was discovered to be a frigate, and the other a corvette of twenty guns (a brig.) The enemy's force was judged so superior, and the wind not permitting us to get out, the Semillante cut her cables and made sail, for the purpose of taking up a more advantageous position in the bottom of the bay. At this time the wind coming to the Northward, and Captain Moutard preferring the chance of an unequal combat underweigh; attempted to wear, in order to run out. But at this instant the wind failed, and came round again to the North East, in consequence of which the Semillante could not perform her intended evolution, and the little breeze that blew made them part their spring they had on the body of the stream anchor, she was then carried towards the shore near the battery, where she grounded forward; in fifteen feet water;

"By means of a hawser, made fast to a bark in the bottom of the bay, the frigate was brought across, with her larboard broadside open to the bay. It was then fifty-five minutes past one o'clock, and we had fired two of our stern chasers at the brig and hoisted French colours.

"At two o'clock, the brig, who appeared to have the advantage in sailing over the frigate, was within a good gun-shot, when the fire began from the Semillante, about two minutes afterwards it was returned from the brig, and at six minutes after two, the frigate engaged, when the combat became very hot.

"Captain Moutard having sent an officer, a midshipman and six men to a small battery at the point, consisting of two guns and 12 pounders and one of 8, that could bear upon the enemy, at ten minutes past two, they opened the battery.

"The English frigate, whom the lightness of the breeze had brought across the Semillante within a half cannon shot, did not double the bay until half past two, when she took up a position a-head of the Semillante under a heavy cannonade. At forty minutes past two, the enemy tacked, keeping at a small distance, keeping up a smart fire from all their artillery, particularly their caronades. In this manner they twice traversed the bay, engaging the French frigate very close, under just sufficient sail to manœuvre the ships, sometimes with their sails aback. At a quarter before five, finding themselves in the south side of the bay, they hauled on a wind on the larboard tack and under a press of sail stood off. The Semillante's chase guns were continued to be fired after them until out of gun-shot.

"During the engagement which continued three hours, at not a greater distance than three or four hundred toises, against a frigate and corvette, the Semillante had only four men killed and ten wounded. Mr. Gois, a very distinguished officer, was amongst the former.

"During the night, by the assistance of the moon, we could perceive the enemy's vessels turning to windward in the bay, under the coast of Lucon, they disappeared on the 15th, being concealed by the point on the north side of the bay of Saint Hyacinth.

"On the 16th at day break, they were again perceived at the entrance of the bay, the preparations, which they could see, we had taken for their reception, most probably determined them from again trying their fortune, for they bore up towards the isle of Naranghees, and at ten o'clock were out of sight.

"They observed on board the Semillante that the English frigate had all her reefs in her fore-top-sail, notwithstanding there was very little wind, and on the day of the engagement several people were observed to be at work abaft about her rudder coat.

"Although the Madras Gazette, pretends that the English

ſhips did not receive any damage ; yet a letter was received by Captain Moutard, from the Governor General of the Philipine iſlands, in which he congratulates him in the moſt flattering manner, on the iſſue of a combat, againſt ſo ſuperior a force.

Extract of a letter from B. W. Page, Eſquire, late Captain of His Majeſty's Frigate Caroline, dated London, 13th April, 1806.

I encloſe the within Letter ſtating Geo. Calders, having forged A. Macgougan's name and mine, and got his prize money 223£. from Mr. Goode, who will looſe it, and have to pay it again to MacGougan: the raſcal was apprehended 12th April making the ſame attempt as John Grant. Convicted 21ſt, condemned and executed at Newgate with great deſpatch. A warning to others, I truſt, and a ſecurity for the Money of my Shipmates being faithfully paid to them on their return, which you may tell them from me.

Extract of a letter from Mr. Goode, Navy Prize Agent, to Captain Page, Stanhope Street, Strand, 12th April, 1806.

" A moſt unpleaſant occurrence has taken place which I am very ſorry will give you both vexation and trouble. In January laſt I was applied to by a man with a certificate (which I was ſomewhat doubtful of its being your ſignature,) of the ſervitude of A. MacGougan,—but ſo correct and general an account he gave of every tranſaction and matter in regard to the ſeveral Prizes, &c. that removed my doubts, as to the certificate, and I accordingly paid him MacGougan's proportions 223l. On the 24th ult. I received a letter purporting to be from John Grant, at Deptford, relative to his Prize Money: I ſent there, but could not find him, nor did I hear any more from him till the 8th inſt. when I received a letter from him, dated at Madras, in Sept. laſt, and atteſted by the carpenter and clerk of the Caroline, to which ſhip he returned in January; this ſo much alarmed me, and raiſed my ſuſpicions as to the payment to the pretended MacGougan, that I conſidered it right to trace him if poſſible, and having a clue to a public houſe in Wapping, I yeſterday went in ſearch of, and ſucceeded very fortunately in apprehending him, and I am ſorry to ſay ſuch facts came out on his examination on Tueſday before the Magiſtrates, that induced them to commit him for further examination on Tueſday at 12 o'clock. I procured George Pallard and James Campbell the ſail-maker, to attend the examination, and they both deny any knowledge of the raſcal, and that he never did in their times belong to the Caroline, which as well as the certificate being forged, I am very fearful will prove the fact.

" The Magiſtrates conſider your attendance on the ſubject indiſpenſible, I truſt you will therefore without much inconvenience be able to attend the re-examination on Tueſday next, if it ſhould then appear as I ſuſpect it will, that the whole tranſaction is a moſt barefaced fraud that was ever attempted, the Priſoner will be fully committed for trial at the Old Bailey Seſſions, that commence on Wedneſday next; ſo that in the courſe of the week, the whole will be brought to a concluſion.

" Dreadful as the reflection of bringing a fellow creature to a criminal condemnation and certain puniſhment, for a crime of this kind is, yet it is a duty I owe myſelf, my family, and the public. God only knows to what loſſes I might have been ſubjected had the villain not been thus detected."

A MELANCHOLY ACCIDENT.

We are sorry to announce a melancholy accident which occurred on the 12th instant. The Bar boat, having on board nine persons belonging to His Majesty's ship Java, broached too in the surf, which was very high and rapid: in consequence of which six persons who were sitting on the cross shafts of the boat, were thrown into the surf by the shock; of these, two were picked up unhurt by the Catamarans, but the other four were unfortunately drowned. We believe the sufferers are, Mr. Bowels, 1st Lieutenant, the Purser, Mr. John Cowley; the Carpenter, and Boatswain. The other three men had placed themselves in the bottom of the boat and were by that means saved, as the Boat righted without shipping a drop of water. There is reason to think that had the sufferers not incommoded the steersman by sitting in the stern-sheets, the accident would never have happened.

"Isle of France, 18*th July* 1806."

"At ½ past 7 A. M on the 21st of June, we saw a strange sail in the south west quarter. We continued our course S by E with as much sail as we could carry, and a very strange sail stood towards us: upon which we lost no time in preparing for action. At 10, she hoisted a blue ensign and pendant. From her appearance and manœuvres, we had no room to doubt her being an enemy, and of considerable force. Finding that she gained upon us very fast, and that any attempt to escape by flight would be fruitless, we shortened sail and prepared for her reception. When distant about a mile, she changed her English for French ensign. At 20 minutes past noon, she was close upon our larboard quarter, and opened a heavy fire, chiefly of grape shot, which we instantly returned. A smart action ensued, and was spiritedly maintained for about a quarter of an hour, when the enemy made sail a-head, apparently astonished at the warmth of his reception.

"In this short encounter our rigging had suffered much, and we had two men killed. The utmost expedition was employed to repair our damage, as well as the shortness of the time would permit. The enemy having run about half a mile a head, tacked, and came down, with an evident intention to renew the action. We were ready; and the attack commenced with a very brisk fire, the ships gradually nearing each other, till they came so close, that I expected they would have locked their yard arms, but, as before, our opponent again made sail and stood off. We suffered severely in this second attack; our rigging and sails being much cut, and the foremast badly wounded. Our ensign had been shot away, but as a token of our spirits being elated, rather than depressed by the conflict, the colours were again immediately displayed at the main-top-gallant mast-head.

"We had scarcely time to replace any of our running rigging that had been shot away, or to repair any part of our damage, before the enemy made a third attack, which commenced by a close smart fire, and which was maintained somewhat longer than in either of the two preceding attacks; when the enemy again made sail a head, indicating, most evidently, that she could not remain along side of us.

"At the close of this 3d attack, we were left a complete wreck aloft; the sails and rigging were every where torn, and the foremast so materially injured, that it was necessary to furl the top-gallant-ſails, and to lower the fore-top-ſail on the cap, for the ſafety of the maſt, as the wind continued freſh with a high ſea. We had at this time 5 men killed and 7 wounded. The interval to repair our rigging was very ſhort; we had hardly time to replace the preventer braces which were ſhot away, before we were invited to repel the fourth attack. We were prepared. Every man was at his ſtation, and in this attack we gave her the firſt fire. The action immediately became warm, and the firing was maintained on both ſides with much ſpirit and effect. It had not continued above 20 minutes, when the enemy again made ſail, and ſtood off, having thus failed in four different attempts to remain along ſide of us.

" Our maſts and rigging were now completely cut up. Moſt of the ſhroud were ſhot away, not a ſingle running rope remained, nor a brace rove, having been three times ſhot away. The guns on the upper deck were diſabled, and only one man remaining at three others; and our compliment reduced by the loſs of 7 killed, and an equal number wounded. Still, ſuch a noble ſpirit of gallantry and enthuſiaſm, diſplayed itſelf among all my brave companions, both officers and men, that under every other diſadvantage, I yet gratefully confided in their ſpirit and energy for the ultimate ſafety of the ſhip.

" From the ſhattered ſtate of our ſails and rigging, we were now obliged to keep the wind, and in this diſadvantageous ſituation, to receive the 5th attack, which began at about 4 o'clock. The engagement was for ſome time more ſevere, if poſſible, than any of the former; but at length the enemy availing himſelf of the crippled ſtate of the Warren Haſtings, backed in our larboard quarter, and maintained that poſition without our being able to prevent him, and he was thence enabled, unmoleſted, to direct his fire with great effect. We were ſo much crippled, that unable to get the ſhip round, we received a broadſide in exchange for every ſingle gun that we could return. The mizen maſt, before unhurt, being now ſhot through in three different places, ſoon afterwards fell upon the quarter-deck, which in its conſequences, greatly contributed to decide the fate of the day againſt us.

" Every effective gun on the upper deck, was blocked up by the wreck of the mizen-maſt, which fell immediately upon them. At this time too, the gun-room was on fire, in conſequence of a ſhot entering by the counter, which, however, thro' the exertions of the officers and men, was extinguiſhed,

Nearly at the same moment, a shot passing over the plat-form, where the wounded were under the hands of the surgeon, destroyed some of his most necessary instruments. The nail of the Tiller rope, at the barrel of the wheel also unfortunately drew out, and added to the difficulties of our situations. The enemy continued his fire with much effect, and as from our disabled condition, there was no prospect from any possible exertion, to offer effectual resistance, a further expenditure of the lives of a handful of men, whose gallantry and good conduct claimed every consideration, appeared unjustifiable, and therefore with the concurrence of my officers, I reluctantly surrendered the Honorable Company's ship to the French frigate Piedmontese.

"The first attack commenced at twenty minutes past noon; —we struck at fifty minutes past four, the whole action comprising a space of nearly four hours and a half, about two-thirds of which time, the engagement continued yard arm. The enemy derived a decided advantage, from the circumstance of our masts having suffered so materially, in the early part of the action. Had the ship not been thus unfortunately rendered unmanageable, I have no doubt, from the tried bravery and spirit of my men, that we should have succeeded, in finally, beating off the superior force, to which we were opposed; yet although their exertions have not been crowned with success, I trust that their zeal and good conduct will not be thought the less meritorious.

"The Piedmontese had on board a complement of 385 men; and mounted 48 guns; of these twenty-eight long French 18-pounders, nearly equal to English 24-pounders, were upon her main-deck. Upon her upper deck, were 10 carronades, 36 French pounders; six long English 9-pounders, two long French brass 8 pounders, and two brass mortars, equal to 36 pounder carronades, throwing grape, cannister shot, and bags of combustibles.

"The Warren Hastings mounted 36 guns, with a complement of 138 men. Our loss in killed was, Mr. Edwick, purser, and 7 seamen; wounded, 18 seamen. The loss on board the Piedmontese, I have not been able to ascertain; but I have reason to believe, that it was considerably greater, both in killed and wounded, than that on board the Warren Hastings."

We perform a pleasing part of our duty, in publishing an extract from a letter ſubſequently received from Captain Larkins, dated "Iſle of France, Auguſt 3, 1806.

"I have obtained the Captain General's permiſſion to depart for England, via America, with all my officers, midſhipmen, and petty officers, which I cannot but conſider as a great and extended favour, and ſtrict juſtice requires my teſtimony, as to the kind and honourable treatment that we have uniformly experienced from the Governor. I am ſtill more particularly called upon, to lay before you the kindneſs and hoſpitality that have been extended to me by the principal inhabitants, to whom I have been introduced ſince my arrival here. Words can ſcarcely convey any adequate expreſſion of my ſenſe of their marked attentions and endeavours, to ſhew me every civility and kindneſs; and you will do me an infinite favour, in publiſhing theſe facts, that the public may be acquainted with a conduct, ſo highly honorable to the principal inhabitants of this Iſland. It is a juſtice I owe, and I ſhould be guilty of ingratiude, were I not forward, publicly, to expreſs my warmeſt acknowledgements."

CALCUTTA, December 8, 1806.

On Wednesday morning His Excellency the Right Honorable the Commander in Chief reviewed H. M. 67th Foot, on the Esplanade. The morning was cool and pleasant; and probably no Military spectacle, in this country, was ever graced by so numerous and respectable an assemblage of spectators of both sexes.

A little after six, His Lordship, with his Suite, came on the ground, and was received by the Regiment with the compliments due to his rank. As soon as his Lordship had gone round the Battalion, and taken his station in front, the line broke into open column, and marched past in Review order: from the strength of the divisions, we do not imagine there could be less than 1,000 men under arms. Having marched round, the line was again formed on the original ground: and the new Manual and Platoon Exercises performed in a style, which evidently excited general admiration.

The Regiment was now ordered to prime and load, and the manœuvres commenced:—Among other moments, we perceived that the Prussian Royal Square, against Cavalry, was formed with uncommon rapidity and precision. This manœuvre, which Tacticians esteem as at once brilliant and useful, was seen to much advantage, from the great strength of the 67th. In short, the evolutions and firings were excellent.

His Lordship seemed in high health and spirits, and perfectly pleased with the steady appearance of the Regiment. Every thing was rapid and accurate, without the least tendency to hurry.

After the Review, His Lordship and Staff, and a numerous party of Ladies and Gentlemen, sat down to an elegant collation given by the Regiment, in Tents pitched on the ground for the occasion.

Madras: Monday, January 26, 1807.

LORD MELVILLE.

After the acquittal of Lord Melville a number of Gentlemen whose patriotic feelings had been excited on the occasion, resolved to give an Entertainment to commemorate an event which redounded so much to the honor of their Country. Lord Melville had for near forty years served his King in the highest Offices of the State, to the duties of which his talents and time had been zealously and unceasingly devoted, under circumstances of extraordinary difficulty—His liberality, and manly openness of character and manners, have been universally acknowledged; and with such powers and qualifications it would have been humiliating to the Country that his conduct should, in his high station, have been found stained by Malversation in Office. And in proportion as the patriotic mind must have been depressed, if guilt had been attached to so distinguished a Public Character, it must have been raised by the result of his honorable acquittal.—The Entertainment was delayed to the present period on account of the season of the year when the monsoon rains were expected.

On the 22d instant, the Ladies and Gentlemen of the Settlement, assembled at the Pantheon, on the above occasion, which was fitted up in an unusual style of elegance, and we have much pleasure in giving our Readers a particular description of the arrangements.

The usual entrance, to this elegant Building, was changed, and at the back of it, which leads to the Theatre, an arched Pandal was erected, 120 feet long, and 30 feet high. The interior of this was beautifully illuminated, and the ceiling decorated with innumerable golden Stars, which had a brilliant, and striking effect—This entrance was continued up the large flight of steps to the back of the front Boxes, over which a chunam floor was made, and carpeted—On entering the Theatre, we perceived an entire change in it;—the whole had been painted a beautiful light green, and, surrounding each window, a Wreath of Flowers was suspended, that began at the circular apertures near the cornice, and was continued down the sides of the venetians,—under the proscenium, large festoons of light green curtains were fixed, edged with black, and to which hung a deep Silver Fringe, that had the most elegant, and gay appearance possible. On turning round we had a full view of the Transparent Picture, painted by Mr. Chinnery for the occasion—It occupied nearly the entire front of the Gallery, being 26 feet long, by 15 feet high, and containing 390 square feet.

Description of the Transparent Picture.

Justice unveiling Truth to Britannia, while History inscribes the Event on the Records of Time—The compartment on the left, represents an Infant, with a palm branch, standing on the base of a Doric pillar, supporting the arms of Lord Viscount Melville, illustrative of the strength, and triumph of Innocence.

In the compartment on the right is a Greyhound: this animal possessing all the attachment, without the fawning of the Spaniel, is introduced as the emblem of Fidelity. He is looking up to the Crown of the United Kingdom (which the Rose, Thistle, and Shamrock, united to them below, explain) illustrative of the Loyalty of Lord Melville to his Sovereign—From the Crown, Rays are issuing, and extending to the faithful servant, shewing that the favor of Royalty has been bestowed on his Lordship in reward * for his eminent Services. The Garland of Oak being decreed by the Romans to those who deserved well of their Country, a wreath of it encircles the principal parts of the design.

The Motto—Magna est Veritas et Prevalebit.

The upper end of the Theatre was fitted up with pillars, incircled with wreaths of artificial Flowers; the ceiling superbly studded with golden stars, these with the convex mirrors of China manufacture, which were liberally distributed, had a most lively effect. The Theatre was lighted by wall-shades only, as much light would have destroyed the grand effect of the Transparency. Between the Theatre and Ball-room, the full Fort Band was stationed. The Ball room was richly illuminated, and the new furniture of the numerous couches, of light green and black was much admired.

On entering the Theatre each person was presented with a description of the large Transparent Picture, which was accompanied by a small circular Etching (designed and executed by Mr. Chinnery,) expressive of one of his Lerdship's public acts, which does no less honor to his private benevolence, than to his great public character, by which he evinced a laudable anxiety, to insure a suitable provision for the widows and orphans of our brave Seamen, who may fall fighting in the cause of their country. The following inscription surrounded the Vignette.

MULIERUM. VIDUATARUM. CONJUGIBUS. EREPTIS. BRITANNIARUM. NAUTIS. NEC. NON. PARVULORUM. PATRIBUS. CARENTUM. AMICUS. ET. PATRONUS.

A. D. 1786.

His Lordship was also the framer of another act of Parliament, by which facility was afforded to the Sailor for providing for his family, out of his pay, during the period of his absence upon Service; and which had the further object in view of securing to him the earnings of his labor, by preventing those petty Agents, with whom our Sea Ports used to swarm, from obtaining, under a power of attorney, too often illegally obtained, the pay, and prize money, to which a Tar might become entitled whilst upon a cruize.

The dance commenced about 10 o'clock, and was opened by the Honorable Mrs. Strange, with Honorable Captain Maude; The Right Honorable Lady William Bentinck, danced with Mr. Roebuck. The other dancers were very numerous, and a set was formed both in the Theatre, and in the usual dancing room. The Fort band being placed in the intervening gallery, as before observed.

The arrangements for the supper were equally tasteful In the large area, at the usual entrance to the pantheon, were a number of field officers tents, placed in quadrangle, the sides of which were raised, so as to form nearly a flat ceiling, this was ornamented with golden stars, and convex mirrors.

The pillars supporting the tents were covered with silver-coloured foil, which, with the paintings representing roses and other flowers, as an ornament to the sides of the tents, had a very pretty effect.

In the centre of the quadrangle, a most elegant canopy was erected, where the band play'd during the supper: this was announced to be ready about one o'clock; the table was covered with the usual produce of the season, as well as with the best wines.

An appropriate song, the effusion of friendship and attachment, was sung by a gentleman on the occasion, with the happiest effect and applause, and was followed by his Lordship's health being drank with three times three.

The following toasts were drank, and the tunes affixed were played by the band.

The King,—God save the King.

Lord Melville,—In the Garb of old Gaul,

The Navy and Army,—Rule Britannia.

The Honorable Company,—Ye Gentlemen of England.

The Constitution of our Country,—May the Commons of Great Britanin ever be the watchful guardians of the public purse, and the Peers of the Realm, and Judges of the Land, continue to be the protectors of innocence, and the administrators of justice,—Hearts of Oak.

This entertainment was certainly of the most brilliant description, whether we view it in the whole, or in its parts. The decorations were all in a superior stile of elegance, and foremost of these was certainly the transparent painting, the whole drawing of which was bold and masterly, the figuers exhibited the justest proportions, and the coloring was natural and rich. The canvas was well covered, and the general effect such as to afford complete satisfaction to the numerous spectators. As an allegorical picture it is entitled to the praise of classical correctness, and from this specimen of the talents of the artist, he has shewn that he possesses the requisite qualifications to rank high in the list of historical painters.

Among the most distinguished of the company present were, the Right Honorable Lady William Bentinck, Lady Theodosia Cradock, Lady Strange, the Honorable Mrs. Strange, and Mrs. Oakes; and when we observe that all the ladies from the Mount and Poonamalee, were added to the numerous elegantes of the Presidency, our readers will readily form their own opinion, how much Beauty must have added to the splendour of the scene.

With very few exceptions, the whole of the settlement were present. The utmost hilarity reigned throughout this splendid, and well-conducted entertainment. Prior to the commencement of the supper, some very well-executed fireworks were displayed in front of the supper-room.

The dance was resumed after supper, and continued with unabated ardor, until near four o'clock in the morning. At this hour the company in general retired, but some of the gentlemen of the party sat down to a second supper at four o'clock at which some excellent songs were sung, and to whom the morning gun was the signal that it was time to retire.

GENERAL ORDERS BY GOVERNMENT.

Fort St. George, January 2, 1807.

The Right Honorable the Governor in Council is pleased to publish for the information of the Army, the following Extract of a General Letter from the Honorable Court of Directors to the Governor General in Council, dated the 21st May 1806.

PARA. 2. "By our letter of the 10th July last, you were informed that "we had taken into serious Consideration the state of our Artillery Corps in "India, relative to the establishment of Field Officers attached to the Battalions; and of the reference made to the late Marquis Cornwallis on the "subject of an encrease of that establishment."

3. "We have learned by a Communication from G. A. Robinson, Esq. "the private Secretary to the late Governor General, that His Lordship "had discussed the subject, and from a conviction of the propriety and fairness of the measure we had submitted to his consideration, had determined "to adopt it,—We conclude however from the ever to be lamented death "of the Noble Marquis so soon after his arrival in Bengal, no steps had "been taken to give effect to his Lordship's sentiments."

4. "Under these circumstances as our conviction of the expediency and "Justice of the augmentation remains unaltered, and as in their Letter of the "25th July last, the Governor General and Council very strongly "recommended an encrease of Field Officers to the Artillery, with "a view, to prevent the slow promotion and frequent supercessions of "the Officers of that Corps, we now direct that a Second Lieutenant Colonel, and second Major be added to each of the Artillery Battalions in our "Service at the several Presidencies; and that the necessary Promotions do "accordingly take place on receipt of our Orders—and in consideration of "the great delay that has unavoidably occurred in these promotions, and of "the augmentations made to the Infantry and Cavalry Regiments in 1804, "and 1805, by which the hardships complained of by the Artillery Officers "respecting their relative promotion to those of the other Corps of the Army, have been increased in a considerable degree, we have resolved that "this New Establishment of Field Officers of the Artillery, shall be considered as taking effect from the 21st September 1804, at which period four Regiments of Native Infantry were added to each of the Armies, of Bengal "and Fort St. George."

5. "In regard to allowances we can only permit of the difference of pay "being drawn, by the Officers of the Artillery, to be promoted from the "21st September 1804, in consequence of our present Orders."

A CARD.

THE PATRONS of this WORK in particular, and the PUBLIC in general, are respectfully informed, that owing to the vastly increased price of paper, the PROPRIETOR is most unwillingly obliged to fix the price of the MADRAS MONTHLY JOURNAL at ONE PAGODA per mensem, (to be collected monthly) in lieu of two Rupees as heretofore charged.

THE PROPRIETOR, at the same time, pledges himself, that no effort or expence will be spared to render this little Oriental Epitome an useful and entertaining Compendium of Reference, Intelligence and Polite Literature.

The PROPRIETOR begs leave to embrace this opportunity of expressing his sense of obligation to the Gentlemen who obligingly favored him with the temporary use of the Madras-Turf Copper Plate, to enable him to embellish his Publication.

Unremittingly desirous to render the Pages of the JOURNAL of every possible utility, the PROPRIETOR has the pleasure of presenting to his READERS, the Civil Establishment of Bengal, and a correct list of the Officers of His Majesty's Troops serving under this Presidency, also a list of the British Inhabitants of Madras not in the Honorable Company's service.

A List of the Officers of His Majesty's and the Honorable Company's Troops on the Bengal Establishment, with an Alphabetical List of the British European Inhabitants of that Presidency, will be given in the JOURNAL for March.
